THE STOLEN MONEY.

Continued.

"You are misinformed," said Brocard. "Here is a memorandum made at this time (March 24) of the notes paid for gold. You can read it yourself. The largest amount, you will see, was a twenty."

"Do you mean to permit an assertion," said Elkin, after several moments of dead silence, "that you did not pay Mr. Travers for his bill of exchange in two hundred pound notes?"

"Persist," exclaimed the Frenchman. "I don't understand your persist. I have told you the plain truth. Persist—persist!"

"I was dumbfounded," said Brocard. "Pray Monsieur Brocard," said the solicitor, suddenly. "Do you know Mr. Capel?"

The swarthy flush was plainer now, and he uttered no more. "Capel—Capel," he muttered, averting his face toward his niece. "Do we know Capel, Marie?"

"No doubt your niece does, Mr. Brocard," said the solicitor, with a sharp sneer. "or that eloquent face of hers believes her."

In truth Marie Deschamps' features were aflame with confusion and angry consciousness; and her brilliant eyes sparkled with quick ire, as she retorted—"And if I do, what then?"

"Nothing, perhaps, young lady; but my question was addressed to your uncle."

"I have nothing more to say," rejoined Brocard. "I know nothing of the hundred pound notes; very little of Mr. Capel, whom now, however, I remember. And pray, sir," he added, with a cold, malignant smile, "did I not hear this morning that Martin Travers informed the officer that it was a relation, an uncle, I believe, from whom he received the said notes—stolen notes, it seems? He will endeavor to inculpate some one else by-and-by, I dare say."

There was no parrying this thrust, and we came away, much disturbed and discouraged. I remained late that evening at Kensington, talking the unfortunate matter over; but hope, alas! of a safe deliverance for poor Travers appeared impossible, should Brocard persist in his statement. The prisoner's lodgings had been minutely searched, but no trace of the still missing fourteen hundred pounds had been discovered there. Constance Hervey appeared to be greatly struck by my account of Marie Deschamps' appearance and demeanor, and made me repeat such circumstance over and over again. I could not comprehend how this could so much interest her at such a time.

Brocard repeated his statement on oath, at Bow Street, and Mr. Alley's cross-examination failed to shake his testimony. The first declaration made by Travers, necessarily deprived his after protestations, vehement as they were, of all respect; but I could not help feeling surprised that the barrister's suggestion that it was absurd to suppose that a man in possession of the very large sum that had been stolen, would have borrowed two hundred pounds at an exorbitant interest, was treated with contempt. All that, it was hinted, was a mere colorable contrivance to be used in case of detection; the prisoner feared to put too many of the notes in circulation at once, and the acceptance would have been paid for in the stolen money, and so on. Finally, Travers was committed for trial, and bail was refused.

As the star of the unfortunate Travers sank in disastrous eclipse, that of Capel shone more brilliantly. There was no doubt that he would succeed, on his rival's conviction, to the vacant post; and some eight or nine weeks after Travers had been committed, circumstances occurred which induced me to believe that he would be equally successful in another respect. I must also say that Capel evinced from the first much sorrow for his old friend's lamentable fall; he treated the notion of his being guilty with disdain, and taking me one day aside, he said he should endeavor to get Brocard out of the country before the day of trial, either by fair means, or by tipping him the Alien Act. "In fact," he added, with some confusion of manner, "I have faithfully promised Miss Hervey, that for her sake, though she can have no more doubt of his guilt than I have, no effort shall be spared to prevent his legal conviction; albeit, life without character will be, I think, no great boon to him."

"For her sake! You, Edward Capel, have faithfully promised Miss Hervey to attempt this for her sake!" I exclaimed, as soon as I could speak for sheer astonishment.

"Ay, truly; does that surprise you, 'Tortion'?" he added, with a half-bitter, half-Malvolio smile.

"Supremely; and if it be as your manner intimates, why then, Frailty, thy name in very truth is—"

"Woman!" broke in Capel taking the word out of my mouth. "No doubt of it, from the days of Eve till ours." But come, let us return to business."

REPUBLICAN NOMINATION. FOR REPRESENTATIVE TO CONGRESS, EASTERN DISTRICT, THOMAS DAVIS, OF NORTH PROVIDENCE.

The New Aspect of the Ives vs. Hazard Case.

We published on Saturday a document which changes most materially the aspect of one of the most interesting cases that ever has been submitted to the consideration of the Court of Justice in this or any other State; the deposition of Mrs. Peckham in regard to the actual facts of the sale by her to Mr. Hazard of the farm which has been the subject of so much controversy.

Without repeating here the history of a matter with which all our readers are familiar, it is sufficient to say that this deposition, confirmed as it is by other circumstances, establishes these facts:

1. That Charles T. Hazard, being employed by Mr. Ives to purchase a certain farm for him at $10,000, made the purchase.

2. That he afterwards, for some reason upon which we make no comment, promised to add five hundred dollars to that price, for a deed made to him; and that such deed was obtained.

3. That he afterwards sold the same farm to Mr. Ives for fifteen thousand dollars.

4. And that he afterwards refused to execute the latter agreement.

The controversy which has so much agitated the whole State has grown out of the suit commenced by Mr. Ives to enforce the execution of the latter agreement. Its merits, relating to the jurisdiction of the Court, and the General Assembly are not affected by this development; but both parties in the contest must submit to the judgment which reasonable and honest men will pass upon the transaction. The strength of Mr. Hazard's case has thus far rested chiefly upon the sympathy felt by the citizens of Rhode Island for a poor man surprised, as they supposed, into an unexpected and thoughtless bargain with a rich one; and upon their disposition to regard with a jealous eye all Courts of Justice, professional men, and privileged classes. These developments have shown that it is the poor man's bull which has gored the rich man's ox, or in other words, that Mr. Ives has paid five thousand dollars more for his land already, and with all the power of the Supreme Court to back him, than in strict judgment he should have done. This cannot fail to react powerfully upon the popular sentiment throughout the State; and it will do so justly. The first object of public justice, as we have previously had occasion to point out in the same connection, should always be to do right between man and man; and the person who has commenced by wronging his neighbor,—poor or rich, will not be allowed to insist upon legal technicalities.

"He who wishes equity must first perform equity." It is true that the rights or wrongs of this particular controversy cannot determine the grave historical and juridical questions which have grown out of it, and which are entitled to serious discussion, and a fair decision upon their own merits. We have tried at an earlier stage of the controversy to point out the distinction between these and the particular issue. The friends of Mr. Hazard have only themselves to thank if they have so mixed up these questions by their appeals to popular prejudice, that the reflex of public sentiment will sweep them even from those positions which they rightly held.

When the case of Ives vs. Hazard has returned to the insignificance to which all mere personal controversies must ultimately come, we trust that the principles of government discussed in connection with it may have a fair and dispassionate review, and may be settled for our own State upon such a basis as may save us from a repetition of the same scenes. It is cause for congratulation that this testimony does not shew the most prominent defenders of Mr. C. T. Hazard to have been at all acquainted with this flaw at the very root of his case. It takes much from that feeling of regret with which we must always regard any unexpected revelation of deception and wrong-doing; and it leaves them with free hands, if they choose, to work out their favorite principles in a better case.

There are now three Americans in the University of Cambridge, England. Two of them are Bostonians, and the third is from Virginia.

The Boston and Worcester and Western railroads have made a reduction of about 50 per cent. on freight passing westward over those roads.

The entire cost of government buildings in Washington, including statutory and paintings, has been $14,709,330.09.

EDITOR'S BOOK-TABLE.

MEMOIR OF THEOPHILUS PARSONS, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, with notice of his contemporaries. By his Son, THEOPHILUS PARSONS. Boston, Ticknor & Fields, 13 mo. pp. 376. Newport, N. S. Ward.

The most complete and beautiful type, and the smooth, heavy paper, of a creamy hue inexpressibly grateful to eyes condemned to much reading, which mark this volume.—Fortunate for the cause of critical justice the book is one which does not need these external aids to commend it to favor.

As the early days of our Union press into the domain of History, great changes are wrought in the public estimation of their leading characters. While the general effect is to drop from notice those whose importance was but secondary, and to fix attention on a few great names, we find the rule not without its exceptions. Accurate study redeems from this fate some who from local causes or personal peculiarities were for a time overshadowed by their more prominent comrades, and gives them just credit for their great though often silent influence upon the most important crisis of our history. Such is the case with Theophilus Parsons. Careless of popular display, and perhaps not of a genius to rank in the very first order of American statesmen, he yet possessed powers, and a character, which weighed powerfully in the delicate balances upon whose turn then depended the safety of the rising nation; and he may be taken as an excellent example of that body of wise and sound men upon whom the more brilliant leaders relied for solid success.

In his distinguished son and namesake the Chief Justice has found an appreciative and discriminating biographer; though we almost hesitate in applying to the book before us the title of a biography. We wish it were more truly one, and that it gave us a more exact and detailed account of a life in which there was so much of interest.

Even as a "Memoir" we cannot help feeling that the sensitiveness to a suspicion of partiality for his own father, of which Professor Parsons so often speaks, has acted unfavorably upon his work. We would gladly have had such a father made more completely and exclusively the subject of his pages than he now is, and the portrait not left so much like the fine unfinished head of the Chief Justice prefixed to the volume.

But this comparison is not altogether truthful. We have rather the fine and perfect outlines of the figure, and lack only the filling up of his daily life. After a very brief resume of his family, and his whole career, we find him sketched in successive chapters as a Statesman, a Lawyer, a Judge and a scholar, and in the social relations. Of the different views, the last, as we have already hinted, is the least satisfactory in its execution, while the first is as certainly the most so. He was a great lawyer, in the fullest sense of the word; he was a distinguished and memorable judge. His activity in these positions extended over a space of forty years, during most of which his contemporaries called him the giant of his profession. But of all fame, that won in the legal profession is the most solid while it lasts, yet the briefest in duration; and the place of Judge Parsons in history will rest chiefly upon the services he rendered, while yet a very young man, in moulding the new government of Massachusetts, and securing the adoption of the Federal constitution.—Professor Parsons has done wisely in giving to this part of his life a prominence not measured by its duration, and by preserving in the Appendix the once famous "Essex Result," and the few letters from its contemporaries which throw light upon this part of his career.

The style of the work is as pleasant to the reader as its typographical execution; and it is only simple justice, to pronounce it as a whole a valuable addition to the stores of American biography.

The following magazines for May are on our table, in addition to those previously noticed.

THE KNICKERBOCKER. John A. Gray, New York.

This is the first number we have seen in a long while of our old favorite, which in the hands of its present publisher has evidently acquired new life, and made a "strife" far more extended popularity. We understand that the poem "Hesperia" is by J. H. Helmer; "Over the Paki" is one of the California reminiscences of Dr. J. W. Palmer; "Literary Puffing" is by Park Benjamin; "My Cousin's Secret," by Miss Fletcher; "The Model Wife," by Alice Carey; "Wat Wanderings," by Rev. A. B. Morse; "Soul Conflicts," from the German of Paul Hein. Dr. Osgood concludes in this number his essay on "Dante from the Modern Point of View."

THE GREAT REPUBLIC.—(Oaksmith & Co. New York) confirms our previous impressions of it—a vigorous and original monthly, strongly Young American in its tone and taste; sometimes also in its want of taste. Its faults are such as longer life will correct; and its very crudeness is a relief after the finished platitudes, and stolen sweets of many of its contemporaries.

MERRY'S MUSEUM.—(J. N. Stearns & Co. New York) is a pleasant and useful monthly, containing a good deal of original and interesting matter, and a variety of illustrations.

(New York) is still the largest and most popular of the kind, and deserves the credit of having been the first to give to the public a family of children, than by a year's subscription to this little monthly.

THE RHODE ISLAND SCHOOLMASTER.—(William A. Mowry, Providence,) has an interesting extract from the debates of 1828, in the R. I. Assembly on the establishment of Public Schools. In a brief article on the "Character of Severe Punishment in Newport," it extracts and agrees with the editorial comments made at the time by the News. Its other contents are of its average good quality.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

"Some Newporters are renowned for their prying, peering, look-around-the-corner, and stare-you-in-the-face, modishness-matty-curiosity."

Hear that, now, and bite your indignant lips, ye innocent and unguessed Newporters! It is what is said by the Fall River Weekly News, and echoed by the Taunton Daily Gazette, the editors of both papers should be indicted for libel. "Prying," indeed! Does not every man, woman and child, in this busy community of ours, have just as much as they can do to attend to their own business? And as for "staring you in the face," we don't believe the "Newporters," as these up-the-river barbarians contemptuously term them, could stare, were they to attempt it. We counsel those chaps on the continent to humble themselves and sue for mercy, lest the people of this mighty island rise in their wrath and—close the gates upon them when the scorching days of summer shall cause them to sigh for the cool breezes of Newport.

We learn that a whale, supposed the same seen near Castle Hill last Thursday, was seen off that point yesterday morning. A party of fishermen, with whaling gear, went in pursuit of it.

INEBRIATE ASYLUM.—The Trustees of the proposed Inebriate Asylum in New York have issued an appeal to the churches of the United States and the American public for assistance. Some of the statements are startling, as for example the following:

"Who can doubt the vital importance of such an asylum: when, even before its first story is completed, applications have been made for admittance, many of which are from the patients themselves? Among the applicants are twenty-eight clergymen, thirty-six physicians, forty-two lawyers, three judges, twelve editors, four army and three naval officers, one hundred and seventy-nine merchants, fifty-five farmers, five hundred and fifteen mechanics, and four hundred and ten women, who are from the high walks of life."

It was discovered in Detroit recently that eight servant girls, belonging to one of the large hotels of that city, had been for some time in the habit of stealing hams, legs of mutton, glass and crockery ware, bed clothing, table linen, provisions, and no end of small trumpery, and conveying them from the house under cover of their petticoats, by means of large bags attached to their loops. In a receiving shop they had accumulated a large quantity of abstracted property, and one of the girls confessed to an attempt to carry out a half barrel of beer in the above manner, but failed for want of a second half barrel to balance her "petate" extension" on the other side.

Mrs. Partington says that just before the last war with England, "circumstances were seen around the moon nightly, shooting stars permeated the earth, the disk of the sun was covered with black spots of ink, and comets swept the horizon with their opiate tails. Everybody said it portended war, and sure enough it did come. Its costiveness was felt throughout the land, but the bravery of General Jackson expiated the American citizens, and foreign dominions soon became a by-word.

Seventy thousand dollars have been collected for the establishment of the new Museum of Comparative Zoology in Boston, which, with $50,000 donated by Mr. Gay, makes the whole available fund $120,000, exceeding by $2,000 the sum required by the legislative enactment to insure State aid to the amount of $100,000 more. Ground for the Museum will be broken this Summer.

WASHINGTON, May 6. An investigation will be offered next session, covering the character of correspondence with R. J. Walker in Kansas.

The President expresses his belief that England means to carry out her understanding with this country with regard to Nicaragua, notwithstanding the operations of Sir Gore Ouseley.

Senator Matia had to-day a long interview with the Secretary of State, with reference to Mexican affairs. His letters from Mexico are encouraging, and he entertains no doubt of the triumphant success of the Liberal party.

It is intimated that Mr. Richard Cobden, during his late sojourn at the White House, availed himself of the opportunity to sound the President on the subject of a moral interposition of the United States in the present entangled and menacing affairs of Europe. It is certain that English statesmen are greatly alarmed, and the wisest are unable to foresee to what terrible issues the present complications are to lead.

The Mormon improprio bids fair to be speedily and permanently settled. It appears that Brigham Young has submitted a proposition to a company of capitalists to sell all their right, title and interest in Utah Territory, for a reasonable sum of money, and to leave the territory within a specified time. Some of the company are said to be here connected with the Administration. The matter is kept so far a profound secret. They desire the aid of the Government in carrying out this praiseworthy undertaking, and it is highly probable that the Government will lend them all the aid in its power. If it cannot be effected in any other way, the subject will be laid before Congress at its next meeting.

Special despatches, received at the French Legation, confirm the report of strong words having passed between Lord Cowley and Count Walewski relative to the course pursued by the English Cabinet. Napoleon thinks the English Cabinet has proved false to the professed entente cordale, and expresses confidence that the English people will never sanction the subjugation of Italy by Austria. The approaching elections for Parliament, he thinks, will prove the correctness of his judgment.
